Foreword

IN ACCORDANCE with the policy that has characterized all her transactions in the past, Trinity this year decided that because of the heavy expense involved and the stringency of the times it would be more patriotic not to issue a number of the regular College Annual, The Chanticleer. There was a desire on the part of the student-body, however, to have established some permanent record of the activities of the present academic year. As a result of this desire, the ARCHIVE management consented to make this last issue a feature edition.

We sincerely hope that this volume may give a true insight to the high standard that has been sustained in all college activities this year in spite of adverse circumstances.

CLASS COLORS: Purple and White

The class of 1918 entered Trinity College 212 strong. The second year this number was reduced to 145. An unusually heavy loss was sustained the third year and only 83 members returned. Military duty and the stress of other circumstances reduced the final number of graduates to 65.

The class of 1918 has been well represented in all collegiate activities, especially in forensic and athletic contests. During its four years stay here, the class has won the following championships: the field day championship in 1915; the tennis championship in 1917 and in 1918; and the relay race championship in 1915, 1916, and 1917. These last three victories gave the class the permanent possession of the relay championship cup.

The presidents of the class in order have been: J. E. Bennett, A. G. Flythe, A. H. Gwyn, and L. L. Gobbel.

The Season

THE 1918 BASKETBALL SEASON, in which the Trinity tossers under the pilotage of Captain Long and Coach "Chick" Doak, were runners-up for state championship honors that will go down in the annals of North Carolina basketballdom, proved, with the exception of last year when Coach Doak and Captain Martin led the quint to championship honors, the most successful in the history of this branch of sport at Trinity.

The season was all the more successful in view of the fact that the most ardent Methodist supporters hoped for no more than an even break in the games played. Not a single letter man and only one squad man returned to college last fall, but with material from the Freshman class and upper-class stars developed in the Inter-Class Series, Coach Doak proved his worth by rounding out a team that reflected glory on the College, sent Washington and Lee and Virginia down in defeat, and was a runner-up for State and South Atlantic championship honors. The season's record on the preceding page best testifies to the success of the Methodist basketekers, and at the same time shows the interesting and thorough schedule compiled by Manager F. M. Wannamaker.

To Coach Doak much of the credit for this success must be given. The members of the quint, the members of the squad, the fellows who won the games, must likewise be given a fair share of credit for their stellar work. Captain Long, with 26 field goals and 102 foul shots to his credit, led the team in scoring with a total of 144 points. Cole and Starling, each with 50 field goals, were tied for the honors of second place. Douglas at center was third with 84 points to his credit. Hathaway at guard pocketed the ball for ten counters and held his opposing forwards to 18 field goals during the entire season. The squad men showed up exceedingly well when they were given occasion to break into the game. To the whole squad, to team work, must be given credit for the phenomenal success of the 1918 Methodist tossers in completing a season that will make basketball history at Trinity and vie with the championship record of last year in athletic glory.

THE WORK OF THE Y. M. C. A.

Aside from the usual weekly meetings of the Y. M. C. A., which, in spite of the decrease in the number of men in College this year, were attended by a greater number of men than ever before; aside from the annual revival, conducted by Reverend R. S. Truesdale, of Sumter, S. C., which did much toward strengthening and renewing the religious life of the community and putting the evil on the defensive here; aside from the service rendered the new students at the opening of College in the fall, the Y. M. C. A. has taken positive and concerted action in some of the world-wide issues of the year. In co-operation with a committee for the sale of Liberty Bonds, the Y. M. C. A. was, in a very true sense, the pioneer in the war work efforts among the students. A considerable sum of money was raised by subscriptions for the Army Y. M. C. A. work. The social and missionary efforts, moreover, were directed to the study of the Race Problem; a series of lectures based on Dr. Weatherford's "Negro Life in the South" were given by Professor E. C. Brooks, and over one hundred students were enrolled in the study.

Military Training at Trinity

HARMON L. HOFFMAN

Since the entrance of the United States into the Great War, Trinity College has shown its readiness to coöperate in every respect with the national government. Even before Congress declared war, the students and faculty were discussing the situation in order that the College might find its proper status in the event of war.

This coöperative spirit was evidenced by a patriotic meeting, which was held shortly before the declaration of war and which was addressed by Dr. W. T. Laprade. At this meeting the students accomplished two significant things: They calmly considered the position of the United States, of Trinity College, and of each individual student; then they eagerly signed a petition asking for military training at Trinity. Soon President Few sent a letter to President Wilson and assured him that this College was ready to coöperate with the nation in preparing for war.

Although the government was not in position to furnish the colleges with officers and equipment, the Trinity students made the most of their condition. Those who had received training took the lead, and the others followed with willingness and enthusiasm. About fifty wooden guns were secured and were used by the Seniors, many of whom were expecting to go to the training camps. The other students had not even a substitute for guns, but they did not let the fact discourage them. They simply left off their arms and "continued to march."

The students did not have uniforms. The only regulation uniform on the park was that worn by Captain J. O. Durham, who had recently been commissioned by the National Guard. Their paraphernalia in line were even less uniform than their civilian clothes. They wore everything from khaki trousers to blue overalls, and although the College has continuously tried to get permission to use regulation uniforms, Trinity soldiers are no more uniform now than they were then. Their hurried morning formation might remind one of the picture of a five o'clock assembly of a Virginia company in 1898, where some "fell in" without their shoes, others without their shirts and almost all without their hats.

The inability of the government to furnish officers to the colleges did not leave Trinity in so bad a predicament as it might seem. There was Captain Durham, who had just returned from the Mexican border; Professor Hall, who had had military training at the United States Naval Academy; and a number of students who had attended military schools. Under these conditions there was law and order, and the training thus received was beneficial to the students both for their physical welfare and for helping many of them secure commissions at the officers' training camps.

At the opening of College last fall Trinity again took up military training, and the administration announced universal military training on the campus for all male students who did not have some good reason to be exempted. The lack of officers at this time was a greater handicap to the cause than it had been before. Captain Durham and many other students, who were of great assistance during the preceding spring, were already in the "Armies of Democracy" or elsewhere. The students still had the assistance of Professor Hall and Lieutenant J. H. Coman, both of whom had attended the officers' training camp at Ft. Oglethorpe, but the class work of these instructors required so much of their time that they could not properly look after military training. The natural results were that too much responsibility was left in the hands of students who did not want to be responsible persons and that the training had to be discontinued.

During the whole year the administration has seen the grave need of leadership for successful military training; accordingly it has been steadily at work to secure a man of ability and experience to take charge of the work. Without a doubt such leadership was obtained in the person of Major F. P. Page, of Toronto, Canada. About two weeks before Easter, when the students were assured of having a competent officer, they began an officers' training camp under the direction of Lieutenant Coman. The purpose of this training was to fit some students for cadet officers, and the result showed that quite a little good was accomplished.

Major Page arrived at Trinity on April 1, which was Easter Monday. His beginning of the training and his influence on the campus have already vastly improved the morale of the whole military program here. He has laid down strict laws of discipline, has put zeal and enthusiasm into those with whom he has come in contact, and has given Trinity students a vision of what may be accomplished by them here both to fit them for army service and to uphold the name of Trinity as a patriotic institution. With the equipment which the College hopes to secure in the near future and with this leadership there is every reason to believe that Trinity may be near the head of the list of the colleges which give military training.

To the Co-ed

PATRICIA

Through shadier lanes I have trodden,
Through fairer paths I've sped,
But there's no walk like the College lane
Along side a fair Co-ed,

Few crips I've hopped in my hour of need,
Little "quarter" from a Prof. have I "pled,"
But when it comes to a class, for me
It's a class with a fair Co-ed.

To many "lines" have I listened,
From four years' "bull" I've fled,
But of all the lines, to me there's none
Like the line of some fair Co-ed.

There's much in a fellow's cranium
That oughtn't to be in his head,
But when it comes to his pocket book,
Just go and ask some fair Co-ed.

It's easy to get one's wires crossed,
As is evidenced by what I've said,
But going to the source of the matter
It's due to some fair Co-ed.

The Sachet Brigade

G. E. POWELL

"Times and customs change"—so do students, bell-towers, deans, pool-rooms, athletics, coeds, military drills, college-bands, fraternities, boarding-house victuals, and publications—some for better, some for worse. Old institutions, organizations, and undertakings crumble and fall, while new ones rush in to take their places. This process of deterioration and "bursting into life" is continually going on. A good example is the alteration that has occurred in the relation between the co-eds and the "he-bone-heads" of the College. It is true that the boys of long ago cast admiring glances at the few college females who flitted about the campus, but this was then done at rather a respectful distance, and only one or two of the most bold went so far as to undergo the few pleasures and many disappointments resulting from an engagement with an inmate of the Fraushack. But lo, what a change has taken place! The boys no longer cast hungry looks at the girls from afar way off, for there has been established the most intimate relation between the two. In the morning you can see a great group, consisting of representatives from both sexes, blocking the doorway of the West Duke Building, and exchanging the usual line of local gossip. You can hear their merry giggle as they prance up and down the hall arm in arm. You can catch them casting sly, deep-meaning winks at each other in the classroom, and, as a result of this intimacy, there has been formed the famous "Sachet Brigade."

The "Sachet Brigade" is a unique order, composed—as the name implies—of the lightest and softest of both sexes of college students. Its organization is rather loose and changeable, being founded on an unwritten constitution. The members pride themselves as being a select body—the aristocracy of the College community, and yet, the qualifications for admittance to this choice association seems rather incongruous with this belief. To be admitted to the perfumed ranks of the "Sachet Brigade" does not necessitate the possession of any high degree of mentality—far from it. The less gray matter you have, the more fit candidate you are. Neither do you have to be an enthusiastic supporter of the undertakings of the College. O no, you can lambast them all with the utmost intensity and still not forfeit your chances of enlistment. Nor is there any rigid moral or religious requirement made of one desirous of entering its folds. You can miss church on Sunday or commit other indiscretions without injuring your standing in the "Brigade." In fact, these things seem to heighten your popularity.

There are, however, some things which you have to do to acquire recognition by the order. You must first be a good "sport" in the true Brigade's sense of the word. You must dress fairly well, contain a certain degree of levity, and assume a nonchalant attitude towards your studies. If you have any sense, you must conceal the fact and be able to endure the nonsense of the other members. You must also spend a great part of your time—when you ought to be studying—loafing around the campus with those of the opposite sex, and, if you be one of the trouser-legged species, it is also incumbent upon you to spend a considerable sum for "dopes"—this is the "Sachet Brigade's" hobby: you must, by all means, be a drinker of "dopes." These are the only primary qualifications of the members of the order. You are also supposed to do a multitude of other things like missing chapel, cutting classes now and then, calling the professors by their nicknames behind their backs, criticising this or that undertaking, etc.

It is indeed with interest that we watch the growth of this unique order of individuals. It has increased miraculously. You must understand that there is no special form of initiation through which those desiring to join must go. As soon as they live up to the requirements specified above, they are automatically enrolled in its ranks and are recognized by the other members by exchanges of smiles, winks, jokes, and other special courtesies.

At present, however, we feel grave concern for the future of the "Sachet Brigade." There has arisen during the last year a prominent suppressor of the order—one who attacks it on all sides. He has employed the Addison and Steele method of ridicule and is attempting to laugh it out of existence. He it is, indeed, who gave the association its name, and, owing to the fact that he has already been successful in killing other things, some fear he will also write the epitaph of the "Sachet Brigade." Let it be said, however, in behalf of the organization, that it seems to be flourishing in full strength in spite of opposition. We view the conflict with interest.

From Blisters to a Service Flag

A. C. JORDAN, JR.

For once in the history of the world thermometers had failed to work, Jupiter Pluvius had hibernated in favor of King Cold and the temperature was no longer subject to anything thermometrical. Coal was scarce and wood scarcer and still there was no sign of peace. An enterprising real estate dealer who had a tract of land in the eastern vicinity of Durham, suddenly thought of a scheme by which he might get it cleared and at once communicated it to "His Honor," the Mayor of Durham. He at once bit and as quickly conferred with the faculty of Trinity in the hopes that through the manual labor of her students he might see the stately pines felled. The faculty at once swallowed his bait and in accordance with the ideas set forth, a meeting of the student body was held immediately after chapel, "Prof." Wilson and Dean Wannamaker presiding. Through their flights into the realms of oratory we were drawn into their scheme, and as they showed us how we, by cutting wood, would at the same time be "canning the Kaiser" we heartily joined with them. Accordingly they nominated themselves Captain and Field Marshal respectively, of the Trinity Expeditionary Forces of United Wood Cutters, for service over the seas of snow and ice which then existed, among the tall timbers. Two huge "army trucks" were secured for our transportation and we, after many exciting and hair-raising experiences, arrived at the firing line. Immediately Field Marshal Wannamaker made a dash across "No Man's Land" and engaged in single combat with a tall murmuring pine. After a "couple or so" of blows with his axe he succeeded in sending his quivering adversary to the ground, thereby gaining for himself the much envied title of being the first among Trinity's Expeditionary Forces to successfully meet the enemy in single combat. However, he had been rather inconsiderate of the tender condition of his hands and suddenly finding them to be possessed of "big juicy blisters" said nothing, but thought a whole . . . lot.

In the meantime the remainder of the company had arrived on the scene of action and were hurrying here and there in quest of the enemy. We had met them and were busily engaged in felling our opponents when some one yelled: "Look at Dr. Ellis." We looked, and would you believe it? he was right there trimming up trees with his little hatchet. At first I thought that possibly George Washington had patriotically returned to aid us and had mistaken a pine for a cherry tree, but upon looking the second time I too was convinced. Truly it was none other than Dr. Ellis. Here our curiosity came near causing our "Exodus" for while we stood there intently gazing at the second Washington, some one exclaimed: "Run for your lives." It is needless to say that we ran and as we did so a huge pine came crashing towards us, throwing up great clouds of snow on all sides, while at the same time it gently brushed the snow from our heels as we went "over the top" of all things in our way. Arriving at a place of safety we turned to see from whence came all our confusion, and as we did so I saw "General Cranford" with a smile on his face together with "Chaplain Peele" standing at the base of the late stately pine, and as I looked I distinctly heard the latter say: "Darn if we didn't like to get 'em."

But I must not forget "Cap" Card, who immediately upon arriving, seized two axes, forgetting that they were not Indian clubs, and taking his place in front of the company, said: "Now boys, let's all keep together." Suddenly realizing his mistake he ended the performance and through sheer force of habit said: "boys, you may all play basket ball for the remainder of the hour." Incidentally we played snow ball. After this incident peace and quietude reigned and save for the clang of our axes as they sank into the pines, we heard nothing. However, this state of affairs could not long exist and we were not surprised when we heard Professor Webb address a large pine with: "Parlez-vous Francais," after it had murmured something to him at each stroke of the axe. "Oui, oui, Monsieur," replied the pine and immediately Webb, who was wearying with well-doing, said: "I pass," and laying down his axe gave up the job to some more persevering brother.

"Prof." Wilson was also on the job and I by all means must not slight him in failing to relate the heroic manner in which he performed his bit. He by some means managed to get me on the same log with himself and in what once seemed to be a vain attempt we succeeded in splitting a "spiral" grained pine. He hit it and I, in turn, hit it. This continued. He wanted to buck, but I didn't and accordingly we tried it again. I wanted to buck, but this time he didn't, and finally after grinning and enduring it, we succeeded in bursting it open, while in the meantime we had made enough match wood to run a match factory a month. It was in the midst of our "drama," just at the point at which "Prof" had wanted to "cease firing" and I had refused, that he turned to me and said: "What have got at stake in this anyway? I gave you seventy on Chemistry two years ago." And from then on until the pine split he attempted to work 'ell out of me.

A scream, yes, and there scurrying across "No Man's Land" amid the brush and briars went a Freshman carrying a quarter of a tree in his arms, while a giant pine tore at his heels. He had ventured close up to the enemy's trench in his onset, and upon suddenly being attacked he had turned to flee without once thinking of dropping his load, and accordingly came near going to "blighty" with it.

We had a number of frolics sandwiched in between acts, but amid all of this many pines fell in despair. Every one carried a few blisters which he prized very highly and the man who had no blisters to show was indeed and in truth a slacker. The evening waned and as the sun of a "noted day" gave way to the rising moon, we left our piny timber to the 'possum and the 'coon.

Everyone had returned home and "turned in for the night," and thus it was Dean Wannamaker through some mysterious vision first caught sight of "our service flag." Methinks he was on the scene of the afternoon's action when suddenly a huge piece of red canvas unfurled before him, prominence being given to it by the blanket of snow which then covered the ground. Thus he had the red and white, but where was the blue? At this point numberless little hazy objects appeared and took their places upon the canvas. Gradually they became clearer and clearer until finally he saw that they were blisters changing into dainty little Red Cross nurses. "Wonderful," he exclaimed, and as he did so behold the nurses were gone and in their places stood the sons of Uncle Sam. Suddenly all vanished and then clear blue stars were seen silhouetted against a pure white background and that in turn against one of red. Then all was complete and upon awakening Professor Wannamaker found his blistered hands were aching violently, but the idea of a service flag was complete. The money paid by the town for our services as wood cutters was accordingly expended in the purchase of a beautiful service flag, and as one gazes on it in future times thinking of the boys in France for whom it stands, he must not forget the blisters that made it possible.

Pinkie Pingles' Persiflage

The Y. M. C. A. reception was the first thing doing here, socialistically. I couldn't help wondering why a guy there kept standing around staring at me so. Have about decided that it was because it was his ice cream that I was sitting on. There wasn't a single good-looking girl there. The one I was with didn't have much of a line. But to start something I told her she certainly did have a trim little waist. "You're right," she said. "There's no getting around that."

Have found out where to go on Sunday evenings. About a hundred and sixty of us fellows always go down to see the 5:08 pass through.

It takes money to stay here. I thought it only fair to write papa today that I needed a hundred dollars more. I'd rather owe it to him than to some outsider.

Had my first quiz the other day. The prof. made us sign a pledge. I wrote him that during the exam I was unable to catch anyone looking at my paper. Further, that my own S. O. S. signals were entirely disregarded.

Have been up to Fraushack for the first time. That young lady looks a little better than she did when I took her to the Y. M. C. A. reception, I believe. Have heard that a few of the girls up there have such a rough time—especially if the boys need a shave.

It shore does make you lonesome when your roommate goes home. Mine's gone home spending a week's vacation shooting and visiting his parents and friends.

I was in the relay run the other day. I would have made a place but a button came off my track suit and made me lose my—race.

Taking calisthenic exercises now every one of these cold mornings. Only one objection. My roommate puts on my best suit to lay down in the wet grass in. Says every time he was so sleepy he didn't know what he was doing.

I just went down street after a suit of clothes. The clerk told me they were $25.00 up. I told him I was a student. He said $25.00 down then.

My roommate's gone again. Went to his uncle's funeral. Wish I could have gone with him. He just wrote me that after the minister spoke everyone passed around the bier.

That young lady is getting better looking every day. I've been to the Fraushack again. After I got there Dean Wannie sent word that I couldn't see her. I turned the lights off.

Went down street last night with a bunch and had a wagon lunch. Everything was a la carte.

I took in the inter-society debate. "That stands to reason," I heard one of the judges say as the first debater got up.

My roommate's been out calling. Guess he'll go on Monday nights hereafter. Said they told him that was amateur's night.

Was invited to the zoology club and went. Heard an interesting paper on why a lightning bug has his headlight on behind.

That little lady is a regular queen. She is easily the best looking one here. I carried her some flowers last night. Said she thought there was still some dew on them. Don't know how she knew, but anyway I finished paying for them today.

A fellow lectured here on Economics recently, and I decided to try to save something for a rainy day. It has been raining every day or so since.

The manager of the glee club just told me that one of their audiences was some mad. It seems that they played at the insane asylum.

Talk about danger! I was almost in a big explosion in the Chem. lab. Prof. Wilson told us that if anything went wrong with that experiment him, us, and the lab with us would be blown skywards. Then he said, "Come closer, gentlemen, so that you will be better able to follow me."

I can't sleep much these nights. I'm disturbed over my roommate's income. It is usually about two a. m. He snores terribly, too. I think he sleeps with his cut out open.

I was too sick to go to our last track meet. I asked one of our boarding house waiters what was the result of yesterday's meet. He replied, "Hash."

That little lady is getting more cute every day, though she is already as cute as she can be. But she isn't so very little; she is a nice height, fairly tall, and is very broad, I am glad to say, in her views.

I was walking down Petticoat Lane this evening—that's near the outskirts—with Dean Mordecai. He says blood will tell; his dachshund is always looking for a place in the sun.

Found out that they're giving a domestic science course here now in sewing. Some are learning how to sew everything, except, of course, wild oats.

Just wrote for more money, tho' I'm not trying to save any now. With everything going up the longer I save it the less I can buy with it.

School will soon be out and then I'll be a Bloody Soph, that is if I come back. I may have other plans.

Had to write for more money. Never thought I'd do it, but I'm going to sell aluminum ware this summer. I'm doing it just because I'll be in the same town she lives in. Then I can see her every day.

DEAR MADAM:

Doubtless you will be most disagreeably surprised to hear from me, but as you know, accidents will happen in the best of families. You doubtless know that dumb dogs are dangerous and that the bark of some dogs is louder than their bite, but what's the use of keeping a dog and barking yourself? Don't count your chickens before they are hatched, because ducks lay eggs and geese lay wagers, the latter of which do not always hatch. Curses, as I suppose you know, are like chickens, they always come home to roost. Daub yourself with honey and you will be covered with flies, and always advise a fellow to choose a good mother's daughter though her father were the devil. Caution is the parent of safety, and before you trust a man eat a peck of salt with him. Care killed the cat, so you had better catch the bear before you sell his skin. Call a spade a spade but don't call the devil; he will come soon enough without calling. Blessings on the man who said "Right about face." It's better to be half hanged than ill wed and to be dead than out of fashion. Be slow in choosing a friend and slower in changing him. How are you swallowing this line anyway, hook, line, and sinker all? Eh? Bell(es) call others to church but enter not in themselves. Bachelors' wives and old maids' children are always well taught. Don't you think so? It's as great a pity to see a woman weep as it is to see a goose go bare-footed. An old ape hath an old eye and an obedient wife commands her husband. All women are good for something or nothing, generally nothing. Now, remember that I am not voicing my own sentiments; however, if I were they might be the same. All things require skill except this and an appetite. But don't be discouraged, all will come out in the washing, even the color in a painted cheek. Advise none to marry or go to war, take my advice in this as I have done neither. After dinner sit awhile, after supper run a mile. Age and marriage tame man and beast. All are not thieves that dogs bark at, else I might be up a tree now. All cats are gray in the dark, then you'd better look yourself over. A well-bred dog goes out and when he sees them preparing to kick him out. Possibly I too would "ring off" if I could see how this line was being nibbled at the other end of the wire. But don't get discouraged, it takes a little fun to make the world go round. I've changed my pen but not my line. A whistling woman and a crowing hen are neither liked by God nor men. A woman, a dog, and a walnut tree, the more you beat them the better they'll be. A woman's hair is long, but her tongue is longer. A miss is as good as a mile, but a muzzled cat is no good mouser. A penny for your thoughts. I take it back, they are not worth the price. A fool may make money, but it takes a woman to spend it. A good cat deserves a good rat. You'd get a mouse, then wouldn't you? A good rule to follow—A closed mouth catches no flies, but watch out for the "Swatter." A lisping lass is good to kiss, but a diamond daughter turns to glass as a wife. Every donkey loves to hear himself bray, but I'm not listening. A faint heart never won a fair lady—don't worry over that, though, 'cause I've stopped fainting. Fine feathers make fine birds, but how about a peacock when he is moulting? Fingers were made before forks. Fish follow the bait—are you following this? Four eyes see more than two, if they didn't folks wouldn't have but one apiece. Hanging and wiving go by destiny, then happy the child whose father went to the devil. He that would have good luck must kiss the parson's wife, then I'm not surprised that so many are contented to be unlucky. He that would the daughter win must with the mother first begin. Immediately if not sooner. O, you've got to be the lover of the landlady's daughter if you want to get the second piece of pie. Little fish should not spout at whales, but I'm not a fish and you "ain't no whale."

This line is intended as a chaser of the "blues"—not submarines, and is patented to this effect. Look before you leap, else you may jump into the fire. Love me, love my dog. Match makers often get their fingers burned. Men rule the world, women rule men, therefore women rule the world. "Q. E. D." Music will not cure the tooth-ache and I never said it would. Then, you'd better see a dentist. Nightingales won't sing in a cage. One good turn deserves another. Pills are to be swallowed, not chewed, and so is this. Pigs might fly if they had wings. Queen Ann is dead, but the Kaiser ain't. "Softly, softly," caught the monkey? Stolen kisses are sweet, especially moonshine ones. Swine, women, and bees cannot be turned; they're "sot" in their ways. The best of friends must part, and I am slowly coming to the end of my rope. The fish adores the bait, but you needn't swallow the hook with it. There are no fans in hell, so I guess I had better stop this hot line for fear less you suffocate. . . . ? There's a time for all things, but it ain't time for me to quit fishing as long as the fish will bite. Are you still reading? When the old cat's away the mice like to play, but safety first, last and always. Look out for the mouse trap. Me, and my wife and my little brown dog, tried to cross the river on a rotten log. The log it broke and my wife fell in, but I held on to my jug of gin. But could you blame me, there's no more gin, times are dry? Ring out the old, ring in the new, ring out the false, ring in the true. I couldn't tell a bigger lie than I've told you. If you're tired stop reading, but I will go on all the same. I'm still running, but I'm 'bout to stop cause I "ain't no" eight-day clock. I've said my say—it's all over. Fare thee well. Call off your dog, you get the pup.

I've finished my theme and said my say,

And "threwed" my pen in the fire.

I see a "black cat" running 'cross my path,

And I know I'm the biggest liar.

Yours truly,

(J)UST (C)ALL-ME (A)RCH.

Epistle No. 2

DURHAM, N. C., Day before to-morrow.

*Miss Blankety Blank,
Co-ed Dept.,
Trinity College.*

DEAR MADAM :

Hello, Hawaii, how are you? When I see your Irish eyes asmilng I am reminded of my own Venetian rose. My little dream girl, I love the sunshine of your smile. When twilight comes you'll come back to me and be the same sweet baby, cause you're just made to order for me. As I'm marching through Georgia, under the big September moon, there's some one more lonesome than you, for I think of the time when you and I were young, Maggie. Won't you come where my love lies dreaming? Papa's girl, have a heart, there's one in a million like you. But say, where did Robinson Crusoe take Friday on Saturday night? Do you suppose William will tell? Down in Georgia on camp-meeting day as the swallows homeward fly, I think of dear old Erin and the clouds go drifting by. I think I see my brother coming now, so I'se gwine back to Dixie. It's hard to kiss your sweetheart when the last kiss means good-bye, but it takes a little rain with the sunshine to make the world go round. I've got a sweet tooth that's bothering me. I've loved her ever since she was a baby, but I would like to know who wished her on me. I've got the time, I've got the place but it seems darn hard to find the girl, but I've lost you and why should I care? I lost my heart in Honolulu in the valley of the moon. I can dance with everybody 'cept my wife, but then ou, ou, I get those homesickness blues. On Mobile Bay by the sea, do you take this woman for your lawful wife? I'm on my way to Dublin Bay where every little movement has a meaning all its own. I'm tenting tonight on the old camp ground on the beach at Waikiki listening to that Yamma Yamma man play Yaaka Hula Hickey Dula on his Ukelele, but something's calling me back home to old Kentucky. Down in the corn field drink to me only with thine eyes. Who paid the rent for Mrs. Rip Van Winkle before Reuben came to town? Everybody's two stepping the grizzly trot or the gaby glide by Alexander's rag time band. But, O, you beautiful doll. You're on the rocky road to Dublin. Welcome, honey, to your old plantation home when the midnight choo choo leaves for Alabam'. It's two little love bees underneath the stars. But I didn't raise my boy to be a soldier for that international rag. My bird of Paradise, put on your glad rags and come with me, 'cause I want to go to Tokio. You'll have to ride, shine, or pay my fine when we all get together on the dummy dummy line, for daddy has a sweetheart and mother is her name. I'm coming home from Coney Island, coming through the rye. Come along my Mandy on a monkey honeymoon. When you're out in my little red automobile you'd never recognize that old home town of mine, 'cause there's a hot time in the old town tonight. I'm saving up the means to get to New Orleans, for I'm simply crazy over you. But Alma, where do you live? Very good, Eddie. Put your arms around me, honey, on the Hoko Moko Isle. Every little bit added to what you got makes just a little bit more. It's easy to lend and it's easy to spend, but it's mighty darn hard to get it back again, so if you got a little bit you'd better hang on to it, cause it's hard to get a little bit more. If I'm going to die I got to see that minstrel show, but what you gwine to do when the rent comes 'round? When I put that rifle on my shoulders I get the army blues. If you knock the (L.) out of Kelly it will still be Kelly to me. Call me up some rainy afternoon when you're all dressed up and no where to go, and tell me when it's night time down in Burgundy. When I was twenty-one and you were sweet sixteen, I wore a tulip and you wore a big red rose, but those were the good old days back home. They all had a finger in the pie, but they gotta quit kickin' my dawg aroun'. Ireland must be Heaven, cause my mother came from there, but say, what's the matter, you lost your dog? Somewhere a voice is calling me, but I know you'll always be the same sweet baby, cause you're just as sweet at sixty as you were at sweet sixteen. I've got the hesitation stockings, I got the hesitation shoes, I been ballin' the jack till I got the Memphis blues. Down by the old mill stream when I first met you it was apple blossom time in Normandy, and you were mighty lak a rose, but now there's silver threads among the gold. Absence makes the heart grow fonder, for there's a girl in the heart of Maryland with a heart that belongs to me. When I was a dreamer, you were my dream and the great big world went round and round. But why did you make me care? Turn back the world to yesterday and then I'll stop loving you. Don't believe all you hear in the moonlight, cause it's always orange time in California. In the gloaming of Wyoming I think of my little gray home in the West where there's just room for two, for all I want is a cottage, some roses and you. It's a long lane that knows no turning when you're a long, long, way from home. Bye, bye, ma honey, by and by you will forget me, that is when I leave the world behind, but stay down here where you belong. In the palace of dreams I'll stay to the end of the world with you, maybe a day, maybe a year. There's a time to weep, there's a time to moan, and it's about time for me to quit. So, good-bye, Broadway, hello, France. As we come to the end of a perfect day and the clouds go drifting by, go to sleep my dusky baby, good-bye little girl, good-bye. Good luck to the boys of the Allies, good-bye, good luck, God bless you. Then, honey, fare thee well, good-bye, girls, I'm through. Sweet dreams, ladies, I'm going to leave you now. Think of me "over there."

Yours truly,

(J)UST (C)ALL-ME (A)RCH.

“Over the Top”

A. C. JORDAN, JR.

“Over the top, um—Empey.” No, gentle reader, it is not Empey’s “Over the Top,” neither is it acted within the war zone. For not only may one go over the top in the war zone; but also in a peaceful country may he perform the feat.

You will doubtless recall that fine May morning when you rode into the Latin room on your prancing charger. How, when the commander had ordered you to give an exhibition of your skill in horsemanship, your steed pranced out before the class, capering before all. Then you remember how all at once, implanting his forefeet in the ground on the brink of a common noun’s declension and raising his rear ones skyward, you went “Over the Top,” landing in a shell hole which had been made by a volley from the commander’s “rapid fire gun.” How, you wounded in pride attempted to rise on a guessed construction only to be floored again by the “Sharp Shooter’s” question. Then, gentle reader, did this not remind you of Sherman’s definition of war, even though you were at home in a peaceful country and simply going “over the top” in a Latin room?

Is there not a vivid memory in your mind of that memorable night on which you, at a high rate of speed chased through that vacant lot? If so, you will recall that something suddenly struck you amidship and in the twinkling of an eye you outdid any of Cap’s “Akips.” And while hanging there suspended between Heaven and earth, revolving on the clothes line like a hub on an axle you suddenly stopped, and with a flip went “over the top” while the “Star Shells” burst on all sides. Then, you remember how the stray dogs came up and after making careful inquiry as to your species, went on their way rejoicing, not even so much as offering their assistance, while you with creaking limbs and a cracked dome limped back to your dugout.

Do you not recall the morning on which you saw that tattered and torn “food conserver” entering the back yard of a neighbor's home? How, when he had safely sallied within the gate he was suddenly and unceremoniously attacked by a grinning canine quadruped? Doubtless you can now see him as he turned to flee, like a trapped fox seeking shelter in all corners of the yard, when all at once with a mighty effort he cleared the six feet of palings by a margin of six inches, leaving the seat of his trousers in "no man's land" while he went "over the top" only to land in the "barbed wire entanglements" of the bull pen. And how as his red "bandana" waved exultingly in the breeze, he was engaged in a bayonet charge by the lordly bovine, only to be accounted the loser and to be carried forth from the field on the head of his conqueror, who madly rushing with him between the "front line trenches" at last cast him "over the top."

War is surely 'ell. "No man's land" lies about us on all sides. A man enters one door only to make his exit by another, while a "rolling pin" or some other form of "kitchen utensil" goes "over the top." Patriotism is the call of the hour and some are so patriotic that they observe wheatless days, very patriotically "loading up" on "corn or rye," while they tenderly handle the remains of some "dead soldier" labeled either "Four Roses" or perhaps "Pocahontas Rye." Although barred from certain restricted areas, they sometimes violate their "neutrality," and appearing in public with variations of the "tangle foot two step," go "over the top" of some street hydrant or other obstruction as the case may be. There are exceptions to all rules, and while it may be the favorite pastime in France for one to go "over the top," it is by no means a lost art in America.

You Might Know It Was a Senior

For four long years he's run his bluff,
And shot his wise old line.
He's shrewdly handed out the "Bull,"
My, but he has the art down fine.

There's wisdom in his expression,
Although quite blank's his mind.
You'll have to hand it to him,
He has the art down fine.

When called upon to shoot his "Bull,"
He'll bravely loose his line,
And always hit the bull's eye,
He has his art down fine.

He's not "one in a million,"
He simply has the line.

Spirits—Real or Liquid?

“SLIM”

The door of Suite 102, North Dormitory, was softly pushed open, a suit case was flung into the room, and a wide-eyed young lady—the first of the Y. W. C. A. delegates—stepped briskly over the threshold. With her first light footfall on the recently especially-scrubbed-for-the-occasion floor a slight scraping and patter-patter between the plaster and exterior brick walls was clearly discernible. “Ugh, rats!” exclaimed the thoroughly frightened delegate as she cast a reassuring glance at the high table and sole chair in the room.

And the fair visitor called them rats, common vermin—those innumerable shades and spirits of the past that scurried from every dusty corner, tobacco-stained nook, and conceivable cranny and fled helter-skelter from their old hiding places up cobweb covered framework to the dimly lighted attic and safety. They were all there from the feeble shades of the early inmates of old North such as Bob Gantt, Hap Hanes, Bock Hurley, Crook Nelson, on down through A. Warlick, Dave Fuller, and Beal Siler to the spry young spirits of Panic Patton, Skin Ferrell, Hip Martin, Yannigan Rone, Jesse Sauls and Fat Matthews. Excited, terror-stricken were they, driven into dismay by the advent of a woman, a Y. W. C. A. delegate, into North Dormitory, into the territory that had been sacred for all these many years, that had witnessed their goings and comings when goings and comings should have had no witnesses, and that knew enough to keep their spirits wandering in purgatory forever and a day, work a complete revolution in the collegiate world, write a new Hoyle by heart, add fifty-seven varieties to profanity as spoken by sailors and saloon keepers’ parrots, outplead ten thousand Charleston niggers in a crap game, boast of woodwork artistically decorated with fifteen coats of Brown’s Mule Best Masticated Paint, tell more jokes that bear a close relation to burnt cork than a vaudeville trouper travelling on the Sage Brush Circuit, give the address of at least 75 business concerns in far away Baltimore and balmy Jacksonville, and swear to the fact that "Full Dress" and "Three Feathers" were terms not exclusively applicable to high society and fowls of the air. And to think that a young lady—a Y. W. C. A. delegate, mind you—had been turned loose in such all-wise and all-powerful territory! Women will talk, and there was really no telling what those eavesdropping walls, those ever-listening doors, or those downtrodden stairs might whisper forth at any time. Of course the spirits in themselves did not care, but for the sake of their physical counterparts in the external world—reputable lawyers, honored army officers, and influential citizens, probably Sunday school teachers or church ushers—they feared and feared as only spirits can fear.

Something must be done and something must be done quickly. Suppose that small, red, celluloid disc always accompanied in actual use by the technical expression "I raise you" should roll out from the table drawer and tell all it knew? The spirits of a certain former Swede artist and a tobacco-chewing midget wished they were safely hidden away from the world in Roxboro at the very thought. Possibly even now the aforesaid stairs and the third floor windows were in the act of rattling or creaking out that time honored classic of "Some one chase down a cuspidor, O. T. needs a bath." Ten other spirits felt as though they had one foot in the grave and the other on a banana peeling. Doors are usually supposed to stay closed, but the lock was broken off one particular door. Doors with broken locks are liable to open up at any time, tell exactly how the lock was disfigured during a freshman bathing feast, and even go so far as to relate in minute detail what late hours it had kept, what dastardly poolroom plots it had heard hatched by candle light, and what spicy dissertations it had been audience to on various and sundry occasions after certain little angels had returned from a call to certain offices in the West Duke Building where Trinity students secure such thorough-going practice in the art of camouflaging as to make a book agent with twenty years experience sound like a tree frog that is in the last stages of pneumonia, indigestion, mumps, and German measles. At this bare suggestion innumerable spirits passed in their checks and ordered one-way tickets to the happy hunting ground.

Slowly the downcast emissaries from the past filtered into the rendezvous. A lowly crew, a dim past, faint recollections, were they burdened down with care and woe. On crutches, canes, or hands and knees they gathered to decide their own doom and the doom of their masters out in the cruel world. No sooner was the meeting called to order than a shadowy form poised himself on one crutch and in hollow, lifeless tones announced that a friendly brick had picked up the information on the outside and transmitted it to the walls who had in turn told him North had been sentenced to life punishment and that beginning next year it would be used permanently for a woman's building. Forty spirits fainted and twenty died instantly from the shock. Life in their old haunts would be unbearable, a continual torture from year to year with the past looming up ever before them, and the walls, windows, doors, stairs, and furniture free to blab at any time.

Hastily the sorrowing shades agreed with their supernatural relative, a certain one-eyed, peg-legged sailor as depicted by one Mr. Sam Coleridge, that Death is better than Life-in-Death. True it is that they had killed no albatross, but numerous "dead soldiers" and wet freshmen marked their path back through the burning sands of by-gone days. With a final effort they gathered their sole possessions, golden memories and sacred traditions into their arms, kissed each other a fond farewell, and with one mighty effort plunged down, down through wall and space into a pot of boiling soup that was being prepared for the patronizers of the North Beanery and journeyed outward and upward to a land where no one tells on his neighbor and doors, walls, and stairs keep their mouth shut.

And the Y. W. C. A. delegate sang, read, and worshipped, never once suspecting the terrible tragedy she had motivated in the spirit world or the soup she had caused to have additional seasoning.

John Love

L. L. GOBBEL

Amorous, affable, affectionate, devoted, delightful, diligent,—and his name is Love. Not Will, not "Shorty," not Cupid, but the one who, although no more angelic or ecclesiastical, is probably more Biblical, one who is the namesake of the man who ate locusts and wild-honey on Patmos; his name is also John! In plain English, the subject is legally named John E. Love, and generally spoken of as Vice-President Love.

Industrious, intelligent, incessant, incitable, incoercible, incommensurable, incomparable, individualistic, infinitesimally officious, inoffensive, instantaneously inspiring, intrinsically invaluable, invulnerable, neither indolent, inactive, incompetent, nor inconspicuous, but inwardly honest and outwardly circumspect is this man.

He is even more than all this. Although his position may impolitely be referred to as "janitor," his duties are not at all so menial as the reference would indicate. Those who know him, and most Trinity students do know him, appreciate the fact that he really fills a higher position. From sweeping East Duke to signing the President's mail is the range of John's activities. And the range is just as wide as it is thickly filled. John, of course, sweeps and dusts, and sweeps and dusts thoroughly. He likewise may be found working away in the college printing office, setting type, cutting paper and cardboard, designing and dickering here and there, economizing where possible. In fact, it is feared that John will some day put the local printing industry out of business. Carrying letters to and from the postoffice and formal invitations for the students to attend the informal gatherings that are frequently held in the office of the Dean or Treasurer, and running errands for the Red Cross women, the Sunday-school Field Secretary, or any other officer of the administration are only a few of John's pleasant pastimes.

And marksmanship is not the least of John's accomplishments. He has reached the point in accuracy where if he fails to hit the animal the first shot, the animal simply waits for him to shoot the second, for there is a gentleman's agreement between John and Durham County game that John is to throw his gun away if his second attempt fails. (Usually John loses.)

John's philanthropy and general generosity is a marked characteristic. Besides deaconizing for his congregation, he contributes liberally to the support of his pastor and his church. Contributing time or money or both to the Red Cross, the Army Y. M. C. A., the "send-off" fund for the colored men drafted, and other worthy causes go to make John an up-to-date negro.

Really John is a remarkable and exceptional character.

It Takes a Little Drill to Make the Day Globe On "PAT"

It's a case of do, or a case of don't,
 Will you will to will, or will you will to won't.
 4:15 and no rain in sight,
 Two hours of drill before mess to-night.

 Fall in. Execute it with some snap!
 Atten-shun! Don't let me catch you in a nap!
 Right dress! Let me hear them eye balls click
 As you turn 'em to the right, doing it double quick.
 Front! Fix your eyes on the groove,
 Arms to the side, steady, not a move.
 Count off! No use to get sore,
 Eyes right as you count—one-two-three-four.
 Corporals report! Make it loud and plain.
 All present, sir. Absent privates Smith and Bain.
 Squads left! Swing your arms by your sides,
 Private Brown, get step, you got a sixty-inch stride.
 Do the column left stunt, hold your pivot, left guide;
 Do the turn on the square, don't swing out so wide!
 Squads halt! Execute it in steps one-two!
 Stand where you are. Private Jones, yes, you!
 Take charge of the company, Corporal Blankety Blank.
 Get step, gentlemen; please straighten up your rank.
 That'll do this time, Corporal, fall back into your place.
 Atten-shun, company! Do the right about face!
 Forward march! Do your guiding on the right,
 Watch where you're going, you're in an 'ell of a plight.
 Pay atten-shun to the orders—Execute to the rear—
 Better learn how to do it—you'll need it "Over there."
 Private H—, cut the comedy—war's tragedy, as is plain.
 No time to waste on you—to train you is in vain.
 Put your rifle on your shoulder, learn the (left) right face
 Come to order arms; do it with some grace!
 Left shoulder arms, bring it down through port,
 You got it down fine, Private Blank, you're a darn good sport.

Inspection arms! Catch it with an easy grip.
 When you come to order arms, place it down,—don't let it slip.

Right shoulder arms! Bring it down to trail,
 Farewell, Private Carter, go open up the mail.

At ease, men: No talking in the line,

I'll have to hand it to you—you've got it down fine.

Atten-shun! Right dress! As you were! Eyes front!

Wake up, private S—, never pull such a stunt.

Company forward march! Squads right about—Ho!

Wait for the command of execution—Get the order 'fore you go.

Column right—march! Mark time in the lead,

Wait for the rear to catch up—you've got up too much speed.

Forward—march! Left-right, get the step,

Hold your head up high—manifest a little pep.

Swing along to the cadence—Execute it with zest,

Remember you're on parade, and then do your best.

Fall out the officers, O! no one's at fault.

Sergeant Blankety Blank,—dismiss the com-pa-ny.

Pay atten-shun to the orders or I'll pull one of ye.

Inspection—arms!—Port—arms!—Dismissed!

Farewell, gentle reader, so ends this.

College, Law and Business

SIR RAH MAHRUD

"So that's what he's doing at Trinity College," mused Thomas C. Elder, Senior, banker, broker, and member of the Norfolk Stock Exchange, as he cogitated over a letter received in his morning mail.

The letter was from the manufacturers of a popular make automobile. It merely stated that they had gratuitously extended their old prices for thirty days longer, and were making a refund for purchases made at the new price. Enclosed were two checks, each for one hundred dollars, covering a rebate on two of their special model machines.

There was a mistake somewhere. Mr. Elder had purchased no such automobiles. He was rather puzzled until he suddenly discerned that the abbreviation following the name on the checks read Jr. instead of Sr. The wrathful broker then became irate.

"Gambling and riding around," he muttered, as his indignation increased. "And on top of that letter I got yesterday," he added reflectively. He drew from his pocket a letter from the President of Trinity College. After rereading it, he again glanced at the excerpt "your son is making a very creditable record . . . is maintaining a very high standard of excellence in scholarship and . . ."

"I'll settle this matter in a hurry," said the senior Elder to himself. Calling his private secretary, he directed her to telegraph his son to report home immediately.

"What in the world did he mean by buying two cars?" querulously pondered the father, as he fell into a deep study. His meditation continued for several minutes; he was deducing more than one thing that puzzled him.

"Oh, the devil! the devil! the devil!" he finally exploded. "So that accounts for her new machine," he decided, referring to a new coupé roadster that his dapper little secretary had recently acquired. Not that Miss Young could not afford such a purchase, for Thomas C. Elder paid well for efficiency; but he knew his secretary well enough to know that her sense of either economy, or business, or patriotism would have prompted a less expensive machine at this particular time.

"The young scoundrel," again pondered the father. "He may have been lucky fleecing some of his friends, but he don't know enough about business . . . why he don't know a hundredth part as much as she does," as he thought of the acumen of his secretary. "But it's high time he's learning something. If he's got nothing to do in college but gamble and buy motor cars, I'll see if I can't find him something else to do."

In response to the telegram, young Elder stepped briskly into his father's office the following morning. After salutary greetings, the father came to the point immediately.

"My son, I graduated from Trinity College in three years, and with honors. This is your fifth year there, and your sole excuse for not graduating a year or so ago is that you're taking extra work."

"Son," he continued earnestly, "I fear you've been wasting your time. Have you been gambling recently?"

"Well, dad, you could hardly call it that—"

"Enough said; while I was in college I neither won nor lost a dollar. But tell me, haevn't you purchased an automobile recently?"

"Yes, sir, I have."

"In fact, haven't you purchased two?"

"Well, yes, sir, but—" Thomas C., Jr., colored slightly.

"And quite likely you're fool enough to be engaged, too," said the father scathingly.

The son reddened still more.

"You're right again," he acquiesced, attempting a smile.

"I'll not discuss your impropriety now; neither'll I question how you obtained the money. But I must say, Thomas, that I consider it time for a change in your immediate plans. In short, I expect you to begin a course in shorthand, typewriting and bookkeeping right away, and then begin work here in the office."

"You forget, father, that I'm in the Trinity Unit that's to leave right after commencement. We're all to volunteer together. Won't that be fine?" he asked enthusiastically.

"Now if it wasn't for the war, dad, I'd fill your bill all O. K., for maybe I'm not so bad as you might think, anyway. I've already had a course in shorthand; saw I'd need it, and took it in my freshman year. I picked up typewriting, too, but I don't know much about bookkeeping. In its place I could substitute a two-year law course, that is, if I could get to take the state board exam. and pass."

"Just what do you mean?" interrupted the father.

"Now don't look so surprised, dad. You see it's this way. Dr. Mordecai, Dean of the Trinity Law School School, offers the best two year law course in the state. Well, I just combined the law with my collegiate course, and I'm due to receive both of my 'dips' in June."

"Why in the world didn't you tell me this before?" demanded the father. But his question was promptly ignored as the son began the offensive.

"By the way, father, haven't you lost some money lately?" inquired Thomas C., Jr.

"A little, perhaps, but that doesn't concern you."

"Perhaps it does," returned the son. "In fact, haven't you lost rather heavily?" he queried.

"Well, yes; the market's been rotten, and luck against me as usual."

"So I thought. Now, dad, you've been playing the stock market too much lately. At the rate you're going you're soon due to lose a good sized fortune. We saw last year—that is Alice—er—Miss Young informed me that at least two-thirds of the times you made a plunge the market went against you.

"Well, Alice watched your wagers on cotton. In the past few months, all told, we figure the market went against you to the tune of $48,000. We'd already figured that we could do better than that by our own thinking. We took the plunge and cleaned up. We've made over $48,000 ourselves on the deal."

The astonished Mr. Elder was still incredulous when his secretary entered, heard the topic of conversation, and corroborated the facts. "We made enough," she added gleefully, "to think we could afford an auto apiece."

"Then you didn't give her the machine?" inquired the father, after the trim little figure had retired to the outer office.

"Give it to her! Holy smoke, dad! You ought to know that I'm engaged to that little angel Sis's gone to visit. I bought the other car for her, but she wouldn't accept it." And he added in a whisper, glancing towards the door, "Then I sold it to Miss Young for enough extra to pay the freight on both machines."

"But I still don't see how you two kids had brains enough to buck the market so well."

Thomas Jr. smiled quizzically. "It was your judgment that did it, dad. Whenever you staked on the bulls, we wagered on the bears, and we were sure to win."
